IN MANDALAY.

Thousands of Pagoda Bells Ring at the Setting of the Sun.

Mandalay has its own sky, soft and gray and incurving like a tent, with white cloud lines that seem meant for scrolls if one could read. It is the Very Sacred City, the city of contemplation, the city of all the monks. A thousand pagoda bells give tongue to the wind there when the sun goes down; a crumbling thousand more give up to time the testimony of outworn things.

It lies in a curved arm of blue hills, and something broods over it with solicitude. This you suspect from the air of the place and the way the shrill talk of the parrots and the complaint of the goats and the laughter of the people come to you wherever you are sitting. Afterward you go out, as I did that morning with the commissioner, and see under the very zenith, where the low gray sky is caught up, the square of the dark red crenellated walls of the old royal city, three miles each way, and outside the walls the parallel clear moat thinking back at the sky, and then you are sure that over and above the government of India some spirit is in possession here, some spirit that bends in affection over finished and forgotten things.

Seven roofed kiosks stand at intervals over the gates in the wall—they are called pyathat, but they strike the eye like peaceful conclusions—and low white stone bridges raised in the middle span the moat. The buttresses of the gates are painted deep gray and white, and the bank that slants steeply from the wall to the water has here and there a low, twisted, spreading tree on it, purely for decoration. You may stop at a corner and look two ways along the reflecting water, with bridge after bridge receding across, and pyathat after pyathat diminishing above, and each red and gray and white vista so picked out and finished under the quiet light slipping adorably into the near blue of the hills.

Mandalay seemed aware with bunting that day, flags and arches of welcome everywhere and crowds flocking—aware and almost awake—but you looked again and saw that she only turned in her sleep and smiled, as at a dream.—Exchange.

Dreamland.

"I foresee the improvement of the moral tone of the public—the amusement-seeking public, and ultimate great benefit to New York, from that beautiful pleasure resort—Dreamland—at Coney Island," said United States Senator Chauncy M. "Children learn by object-lessons. pretty blocks and pretty picture-books and so forth and the public is a big child, willing to be instructed if it is amused at the same time. Dreamland furnishes a pretty and elevating picture. It is a perfect piece of construction and among the attractions, I saw none that in any way pandered to low human passions.

Checked a Mob.

George Hummell, Willard [illegible] William Garrabrant, all Sec[illegible] residents, figured in a sensati[illegible] code on Bloomfield avenue on morning. Messrs. Hummell and Towne were driving to Newark, at about half past nine o'clock, and opposite the hat factory, near the Morris canal, they met two men in a rig driving towards this town. The larger of the two men was pounding the smaller one with his fist, and at the same time appeared to be trying to get in his pockets. The man who was being beaten was in a helpless condition apparently. Mr. Hummell recognized the horse, and he said to Mr. Towne that he thought it was a Bloomfield rig. Three or four men standing along the roadside acted unconcernedly about what was going on in the wagon, but Messrs. Hummell and Towne stopped to investigate, and discovered that the helpless individual who was being beaten was William Garrabrant of Brookdale. Mr. Towne called to Garrabrant's assailant and asked why he was pounding his companion. The fellow, who was a tough specimen, replied that "it was none of his d—d business." Thereupon Mr. Towne proceeded to make it his business, and jumping from his own wagon he grabbed the tough and pulled him from Garrabrant's wagon. The tough then turned on Mr. Towne, and the latter knocked him down. The tough got up and again went for Towne, and was again thrown down, and a rough scramble in the road followed. By this time men from the hat factory came upon the scene, and a policeman was sent for. The hatters said they would hold Garrabrant's assailant until the police came, and Messrs. Hummell and Towne drove on to Newark.
